The topics of today

- Key facts and figures about the contemporary Finland
- The Finnish way of life and its peculiarities
- A short history of Finland
- Contemporary Finnish political system and society
- Finland today – between the past, the present and the future

Where are you now? What you might know?

Finland is one of the Nordic Countries, located in the Northern Europe.

Finland is NOT a Scandinavian country. Scandinavia = Sweden + Norway + Denmark.

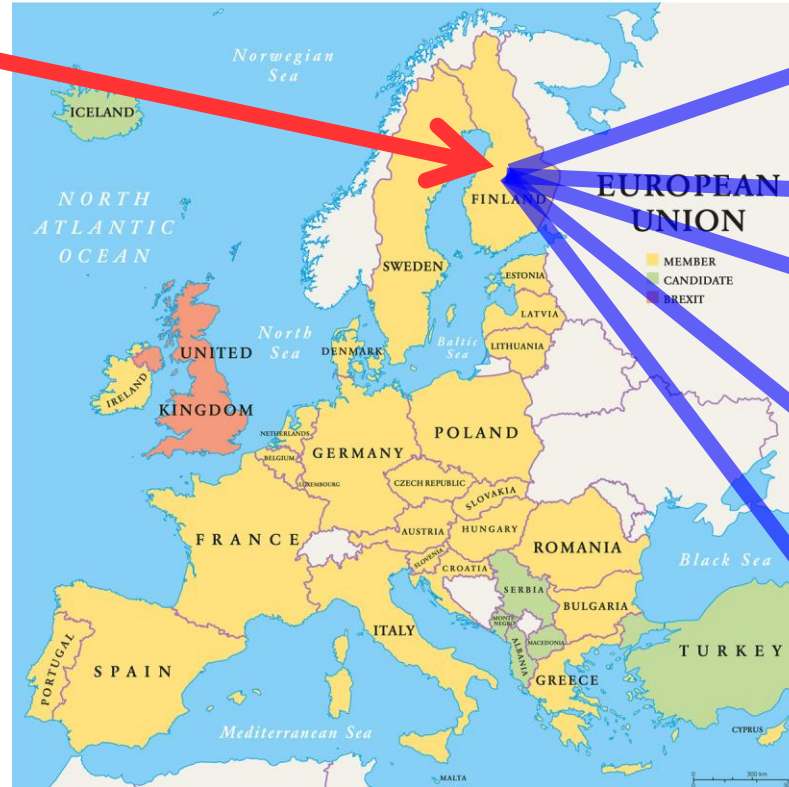

Thousands of lakes, large forests, rocky ground, no big mountains but fells in Lapland, large inland and maritime archipelagos.

Winter is cold, summer is moderately warm, sometimes even hot, due to Gulf stream in the Atlantic Ocean.

The capital is Helsinki (~675.000 inhabitants).

In the periphery of Europe, on the border of Russian sphere, in history sometimes isolated, sometimes conquered, now independent but integrated into Europe. At the crossroads of geopolitical passions and cultural influences.

“Nordic community” with Sweden, Denmark and Norway. Member of the EU since 1995, and member of NATO since 2023.

National languages (2022) are Finnish (86.5 %), Swedish (5.2 %), and Sami languages (~2.700 speakers). Foreign language speakers 8.9 % (Russian 1.7%, Estonian 0.9%, Arabic 0.7%, English 0.5%)

A Finnish way of life

Finland is officially “an orderly, peaceful, functioning, and educated society”.

A liberal and pluralistic European society with few problems and quite a small differences in standards of living. Also, Finland is seen as a safe place to live.

The nature, including forests, lakes, archipelago, and the Baltic Sea, is still an important part of the Finnish mental landscape. We have quite a unique summer cottage (kesämökki) lifestyle, berry & mushroom picking, hunting and fishing, outdoor sports, and physical exercise.

The so-called “everyone's right” allows you to move freely in the wilderness (but no free camping, no fire), to pick wild berries and mushrooms in forests and to catch fish with a rod and line (but spinning and trolling with a motorboat only against a fishing fee!).

Traditionally, Finns have subscribed to a rather strong “Protestant ethics”, stressing hard work and traditional values. Nowadays ~ 67 % of the population belongs to Evangelical Lutheran Church. In 1950 95.0 %, and in 2000 85.1 % belonged to the church. The younger generations “tick differently” in some respect → there are widening cleavages between “cosmopolitan value-liberal” and “national conservative” groups, even among the young people.

A catching-up urbanisation: in 2022 ~85 % of the population lives in urban areas.

A short history of Finland (I)

From the 13th century to 1809 Finland was a province of the Kingdom of Sweden. From 1809 to 1917 Finland was an autonomous Grand Duchy, ruled by the Russian Czars. Autonomous Finland had its own constitution, currency, customs border, senate, administration etc.

The Finnish Parliament declared independence on 6 December 1917. Following the revolutions in Russia 1917, there was a similar breakdown in Finnish society.

In spring two 1918 armed military groups, the White (republican) army and the Red Guards (communists), fought against each other in the Finnish Civil War.

Finnish government and the White army won the Civil War, but the country was in a turmoil, its economy destroyed, its political apparatus and its people divided. The Communist Party of Finland was established by the former red leaders who fled to Soviet Russia.

Despite of suspicion and bitterness on both sides, a slow recovery started after the Civil War. In the 1920s and 1930s Finns became reunited through compromises of moderate political groups on both the left and right. Right wing extremism was largely rejected in the early 1930s, and Finland remained a parliamentary democracy, even through the years of World War 2.

During the WW2 Finland fought twice against the Soviet Union – in the Winter War (1939–1940) and the Continuation War (1941–1944). In 1941 Finland allied itself with Nazi Germany. After the signing of the Moscow Armistice (September 1944) Finland was obliged to repel the German troops from its territories → the Lapland War (1944–1945). Nearly 97.000 Finns died and almost 160.000 wounded during the WW2.

In the aftermath of the WW2, Finland had to cede several of its Eastern territories, including Karelian Isthmus, to pay the Soviets reparations of $300 million (~ ½ of the Finnish GDP in 1939)

A short history of Finland (II)

Finland was able to retain its democratic structures and market economy during the Cold War years. Between the late 1940s and the mid-1990s, Finland transformed from a mainly agricultural society to a post-industrial, service-based information society.

Although heading to the West(ern Europe), Finland remained politically and militarily non-aligned. In 1948 Finland signed the Agreement on Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance with the USSR. Despite the treaty Finland succeeded in balancing between the West and the East and in maintaining its status as a relatively neutral country between the superpowers.

However, the priority of the Soviet relations reflected on Finnish society and inner politics, and even compromised some features of democratic institutions, such as the presidency of the republic. President Urho Kekkonen remained in power from 1956 to 1982. He was considered the only competent guardian of Finnish sovereignty. In 1975, Finland hosted the Conference for Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE), which was a personal triumph for President Kekkonen.

After the collapse of the Soviet Union, Finland suffered from severe economic depression in 1991–1993. It was a shock for the Finnish economy and cut deep wounds in the Finnish society. Many Finnish banks and companies went bankrupt, and high unemployment remained until the late 1990s.

A short history of Finland (III)

Joining the EU in 1995 – together with Sweden and Austria – was one of Finland’s most important and impactful decisions after the WW2. The membership anchored Finland into the Western sphere of liberal democracies.

In the contemporary EU, Finland is one of the smallest member states → the most important reference countries are the other Nordic EU-countries and Germany.

Generally speaking, Finns are rather positive about the EU and Finland’s membership in the EU.

In 1999, Finland joined the EURO area and in 2002 it followed 11 other EU countries in adopting euro currency (€). In 2005, together with other Nordic countries, Finland ratified European Schengen agreement on border controls.

Main societal trends in Finland mirror wider European trends. Turnout in the EU parliamentary elections has been remarkably low (<50%).

Russia’s occupation of Crimea in 2014 and a full-scale war against Ukraine since 2022 have dramatically changed the “mental map” of the Finns (more on that on the last slides).

Political system

Finland gained independency on 6 December 1917.

Finland is a parliamentary democracy with a multiparty political system.

Legislative power is exercised by the Parliament (eduskunta).

Relations between the Parliament, the Government and the President are governed by the principles of European party-based parliamentarism.

President (the Head of State): Alexander Stubb (term: 2024–2030).
Minor executive role, but major role in foreign policy and military.

Prime Minister: Petteri Orpo, National Coalition Party (term: since 6/2023). PM is the most powerful executive actor.

Current coalition of the Finnish government: NCP, Finns, SPP, CD.

Parliament

At its birth in 1906, the Finnish Parliament (eduskunta) was something of a rarity, because:

1. Finland was not a sovereign state, but an autonomous state within the Russian Empire.
2. Unicameral and elected by universal suffrage, women included not only voters but also as MP candidates.

Consists of 200 MPs, elected by the people for a term of four years.

Current legislative period: 2023–2027 (scheduled).

Parliament has three main functions:

1. passes all the laws
2. debates and approves the national budget
3. supervises the way the country is governed (parliamentarism)

Finland and the “emerging new normality”

NATO

Finland joins NATO

Finland has become the 31st country to join the world's largest military alliance. The Nordic nation shares a 1,340km (833-mile) border with Russia, which has long complained about NATO's eastwards expansion.

Russia's aggressive war against Ukraine has reset the security framework of Europe established in 1975 (CSCE). The EU – and Finland as its member – is facing an armed conflict in its closest neighbourhood.

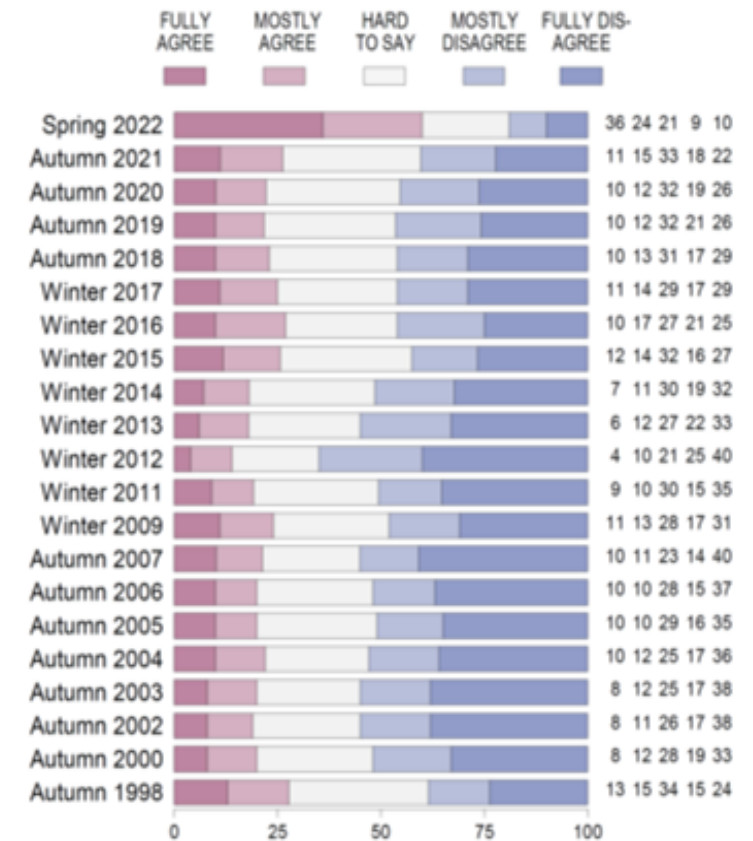

Finland is only indirectly affected by the energy crisis in Europe. Finland is not dependent on Russian oil, gas or uranium.

Finland's immediate reaction was the decision to apply, together with Sweden, for a membership in NATO in spring 2022. This turn was supported by a “about-turn” of opinion polls on NATO membership within the shortest period.

Finland's full membership in NATO since 4 April, 2023 is, as regards its impact, less dramatic compared to the joining of the EU → the strongest expected change will be in Finland's geopolitical position and status.

Finland's (and Sweden's) membership will also change NATO → 1300 km new border with Russia and a new Northern dimension. The biggest impact, however, will be on Europe's future security-political architecture.
